

Work Wise

Projects Abroad launches online forum

INTERNATIONAL volunteering company, Projects Abroad, has launched an online journalism magazine called Voices of the World for budding journalists to exchange opinions and ideas with other volunteers and local residents.

In order to recruit aspiring journalists, Projects Abroad's 14 offices in Romania, Ghana, India, Bolivia, China, South Africa, Senegal, Mexico, Mongolia, Moldova, Argentina, Sri Lanka, Ethiopia and Costa Rica will create local journalism clubs to accept local students who show an aptitude and interest for writing.

Peter Slowe, Director and Founder of Projects Abroad, said, "Under the supervision of a Projects Abroad representative in each destination and with the help and participation of the Projects Abroad journalism volunteers, students will be encouraged and empowered to discuss topics with their counterparts in other countries and to research, interview and finally write about those topics chosen." The best articles will then be published in the online magazine.

Projects Abroad currently sends 7,000 volunteers from 40 countries overseas to work in projects – including teaching, conservation, medicine, law, human rights and journalism – in 14 destinations.